The biggest draw for many is the chance to work in one of the many underground casinos. These casinos are almost always underground, either on a boat or under a hotel or resort. By working in an underground casino you will always have the money in your pocket, but this can be risky. The casinos need people to clean the rooms, mop the floors and deal with the junkies that will definitely know who you are at these places. All in all, underground casinos can be very lucrative but usually short lived. Top brass on the Royal Australian Navy's newest interceptor boat, the Perth, are preparing to take the vessel on a world tour next year to mark the transition from a vessel in commission into a museum. Commodore Craig Ritchie, Commander of the Australian Fleet, said the ship — built by Austal Ships — was undergoing trials this week after a six-year construction time. He said the ship needed to go on the world tour to satisfy various requirements by the Department of Defence. "It needs to satisfy some of the requirements from the Government for the ship to be considered not fit for active service," Commodore Ritchie said. "We've got a lot of other activities that we need to do — we're not necessarily boat builders — but actually to put this ship in the water for the new owners, we need to satisfy these requirements." He said the vessel would be taking part in "public relations activity" next year. "The ship will be around for probably until spring or summer next year. I guess I can't put
